

Sourcing candidates overseas will become the norm. How can you help prepare your people?

For the candidate - Moving to a new city can be one of life's most exciting opportunities but it is also be one of the most challenging especially when there is a family involved because the issues become even more complex. Severing old ties, finding new schools, choosing the right neighborhood and establishing whole new social frameworks only add to the practical things that need to be done. People need access to real local and impartial information so they can make informed decisions before they arrive.

An on-line relocation tool is helping people to make a smooth transition

The [™]Virtual Relocator Resource is Australia's first and only on-line, do-it-yourself virtual relocation platform. Purpose built to support the process of moving to Australian cities, the Melbourne based company, relocations-made-easy has developed this powerful platform that pools all information necessary for a successful move and offers it through a portal that is intuitive and user friendly. All information is gathered by people who have lived, worked and raised their families in each destination city and the user is guided through the platform by a virtual relocation tool tailoring information to suit their needs and arriving at the range of suburbs most likely to suit housing, education, and lifestyle requirements. In this way the candidate gets a quick handle on detailed aspects of the city they are moving to, are better prepared and can set proper expectations while using the platform to drill right down to neighborhood and school level to make the necessary contact to position themselves on waiting lists, set up property inspections etc. The aim of the resource is to help people make fruitful preliminary research and considerable contact before they leave home so they can hit-the-ground-running and settle as quickly and smoothly as possible in the new city.
